MHRA is a numeric referencing style and is published by the Modern Humanities Research Association.

It uses footnotes for in-text citations, and these are identified by a superscript number, usually at the end of the sentence, after the full stop.

The numbers in the text are then linked to the footnotes.

And please note the first time you cite a source, full details are given and additional references to the same source are then provided in an abbreviated form.

Please see the PDF below for more information and you may also use the reference generator tool to help you to create your own references.
