THE GRADUATE

“In what has been an exceptionally difficult year, the Graduate School has delivered a programme to support the development of leadership skills for key healthcare professionals. It is particularly pertinent that the first cohort to benefit from this innovative and exceptionally high quality programme were General Practitioners whose skills’ development was utilised for the benefit of those they work with and most importantly, those they care for - their patients.”

- Professor Sue Morison, Director Postgraduate Training in the School of Medicine, Dentistry and Biomedical Sciences, Queen’s University Belfast

“In Northern Ireland there is a need for transformative change in the delivery of healthcare. [...] Change requires adept leadership and an opportunity arose to work collaboratively with our colleagues in QUB, in the Graduate School and the School of Medicine in this regard. The programme delivers the opportunity to form a cohort of participants who can network across the healthcare system to enable change in service delivery. It is grounded in the day to day work of the participants. Such an approach will affect the day to day care experienced by our patients in Northern Ireland.”

- Dr Claire Loughrey, Director of General Practice Education and Training in General Practice and the original commissioner of the Programme
