Finding Resources

- Yes, there are more resources than just books!
- Search for sources:
  - Use your key words
  - Timeframe (how recent should sources be?)
  - Types of sources (e.g. books, journals, newspapers and magazines, conference papers, government publications, artwork, publishers’ websites, online discussions)
  - Begin searching more creatively and narrow as you go

Performing preemption

Abstract
Nearly 15 years after 9/11, it is time to grapple with the way in which imperatives of preemption have made their way into routine security practice and bureaucratic operations. As a growing literature in security studies and political geography has argued, preparing for catastrophe, expecting the worst, and scripting disasters are central elements of contemporary, speculative security culture. One of the most-discussed findings of the 9/11 Commission Report was that US security services had insufficiently deployed their imagination to foresee and preempt the attacks. This article introduces a special issue that offers a range of in-depth empirical studies that analyse how the imperative of “routinising the imagination” plays out in practice across different policy domains. It deploys the lens of performative in order to conceptualise and explain the materialization of preemption and its situated entanglements with pre-existing security bureaucracies. We detail the idealised trails of a “security of the interstice”, which include interoperability, emergence, flexibility and analytical forays that are meant to bridge the perceived gaps of security spaces and the temporal bridges between present and possible futures. The lofty rhetoric of preparing for the worst and bridging the gaps encounters numerous obstacles, challenges and reversals in practice. As becomes clear through the notion of performative, such obstacles and challenges do not just ‘stand in the way’ of implementation, but actively shape the materialisation of preemption in different sectors.

Search for Literature: Tips

- Examine reference lists closely
- Look for key authors
  - Go onto their homepage / profile and investigate their publications carefully
  - Look at “Introductory” books or edited volumes
  - Approach authors if you cannot get hold of publications
- Search for articles within significant journals instead of relying solely on databases
- Use the keywords in your research question to find suitable literature

Zetoc: The monitoring and search service for global research publications

Welcome to Zetoc. We are one of the world’s most comprehensive research databases, giving you access to over 20,000 journals and more than 52 million article citations and conference papers through the British Library’s electronic table of contents.

Keeping pace with your peers, staying up to date with new research, and expanding your field of knowledge has never been so simple. We make it easy for you to set-up personalised email Zetoc Alerts or RSS feeds to track the latest articles or journal titles related to your interests. In most cases, you can access abstracts or the full text of articles, depending on your institution’s subscription arrangements.

Our service is free for members of Jisc-sponsored UK higher and further education institutions, research councils. Among our subscribers are NHS organisations in England, Scotland and Northern Ireland, and a number of other institutions are also eligible to subscribe.

Zetoc: Always improving

In line with our quest for continual improvement and user satisfaction, if you have any comments about the Zetoc service we would welcome your feedback.

You can also join the Zetoc mailing list where all future Zetoc news and information updates regarding the service will be posted: zetoc@jiscmail.ac.uk

Please note:

- Maintenance of Zetoc Service at risk Tuesday 3rd November (AM).
- Change of Email Address for Contacting Zetoc Support and Other Service Changes.
- Zetoc cloud platform and new web address.

Questions?
Gathering Research for your Dissertation

In most subject fields at Queen’s you will be asked to complete a dissertation. While writing the dissertation can be a challenge in itself, so can gathering the resources needed to answer your stated research question.

Try some of the following tips for collecting research material together:

- Refer back to your module guide: Your module guide is full of useful readings and resources. Generally they are neatly organised under topic headings. Your module convenor will have spent a significant amount of time in selecting relevant material for each topic and will have provided you with both essential and desirable readings. Whereas you wouldn’t normally be expected to consider all of this reading in advance of a weekly tutorial, you should become familiar with this content if it is relevant to your dissertation research.

- Identify the key words in the dissertation topic: Deconstruct the dissertation title and highlight each of the key words. This is important as the key words will help to inform your background research and will be used when gathering reading material and other resources. Ask yourself, do you fully understand the question and/or the dissertation topic? Often students struggle to begin their research because they aren’t sure of the task at hand. Don’t be afraid to approach your module tutor for clarity. In addition, feel free to meet with your peers and discuss your proposed dissertation topic.

- Visit the Library: Depending on your discipline, the library will be your first port of call. The various library facilities (McClay, Medical & HSC, and Biomedical Library) are well equipped and contain a wealth of materials. For example, the McClay Library contains a Learning Resource Centre, which contains basic reference materials. The library also holds detailed guides to research skills that you may find useful. The library staff are more than willing to assist you, so don’t be afraid to ask for advice.

- Explore the Internet: The Internet is a fantastic source of information and a useful place to begin your research. Resources available online tend to change more frequently than traditional library archives, and as technologies advance, so too does the way information is disseminated. In many cases, the quality of information on the Internet is the same as in hard copies, so don’t be afraid to download resources and save them to your computer.

- Consult Journals: Journals are books that contain several related articles on a particular subject. Typically they are published quarterly, although some are published monthly. They are available through the library and contain high-quality content. Some journals are available online, while others can only be obtained in hard copy form. Depending on your discipline, there may be a number of journals that would suit your needs.

- Search for book collections: The library contains a wide variety of books on different subjects. Depending on your discipline, the library can provide you with a wealth of subjects on which to research. For example, in the field of psychology, the library has a large collection of books on the subject of mental health. This is particularly helpful if you are struggling to find relevant reading material.
My Personal Recommendations

• Start using Refworks now, and you will not regret it later on

• Use Web Crawlers to support your search process
  • Advanced Operators for Web Search on Google

• Safe all literature with the full title: Duplicates get then detected quite easily

• Highlight papers you’ve read in your PDF reader and/or make digital remarks on them to remember (a) that you’ve read the paper and (b) what you thought of it
