PREPARING STUDENTS FOR THE FUTURE

The School of History, Anthropology, Philosophy and Politics (HAPP) is a vibrant interdisciplinary community exploring culture and society. From the origins of humanity and ancient history to contemporary political themes and international affairs, students enjoy a rich learning experience with world-leading experts bringing knowledge and research passions into small group teaching and active discussion.

CAREER-FOCUSSED

With high quality teaching and opportunities for student placements, students at the School of HAPP will gain a wide range of core skills and employment-related experiences that are increasingly valued by employers, professional organisations and academic institutions. The School maintains strong links with local government, NGOs, public bodies, voluntary organisations, museums etc.

UNIQUE LOCATION

Belfast is a significant post-conflict location for studying complex themes such as peace and conflict transformation, terrorism and security, public history and political theory, alongside other areas including anthropology and the histories of nations across the world. One of the largest politics departments in the UK and Ireland, Queen's is a fantastic place to engage with a wide range of connected themes.

Placement – All undergraduate students at the School of HAPP have the opportunity to gain real-world experience with an optional placement at an external organisation.

THINKING BEYOND

Student Societies – Discover the Anthropology Society, History Society, Philosophy Society, Politics Society, PPE Society, as well as Model NATO, Literific Society (debating), Queen's Radio, and many more.

Study Abroad – Explore a range of overseas study exchanges to experience another culture and unearth new ways of learning.
