

N. Ireland Cancer Registry Implications of Research for Services

NICR Lead Author Dr Anna Gavin (Office use only)
Paper ID 2016-11 (Office use only)
Date Submitted to NICR Steering Group 14/11/2016 (Office use only)

Paper Title	Ethnicity and the prostate cancer experience: a qualitative metasynthesis.
Authors	Rivas C, Matheson L, Nayoan J, Glaser A, Gavin A, Wright P, Wagland R, Watson E.
Journal	Psychooncology. 2016 Oct;25(10):1147-1156.
DOI	doi: 10.1002/pon.4222.
Funders
Full paper available online	YES <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> NO <input type="checkbox"/> NOT YET <input type="checkbox"/>
Conclusion	The prostate cancer experience of BME men and their partners is affected by a complex intersection of ethnicity with other factors. Health care services should acknowledge this. If providers recognise the men's felt masculinities, social identities, and spiritual beliefs and their shifting nature, services could be improved, with community as well as individual benefits. More studies are needed in diverse ethnic groups.
What this means for the service	Needs to be recognised that subgroups have special needs.