Why should you come to the Belfast Summit on Global Food Integrity?

The Belfast Summit on Global Food Integrity will bring together food-security experts from all over the world, spanning academia, industry, agriculture, NGOs and regulators. Over the course of four days, they will grapple with the dilemma of how to feed a growing global population with integrity - amid issues such as pollution, climate change, Brexit, food fraud and food terrorism.

Its Chairperson, Queen's University Belfast Pro-Vice-Chancellor Professor Chris Elliott, conducted the UK Government's inquiry into the horsemeat scandal of 2013. This will be no ordinary university conference but a high-level, international Summit, focused on delivering a White Paper of policy recommendations.

Summit Themes

Deliberate contamination of food

The threat from pathogens to the food system

Human exposure to chemical cocktails present in foods

Delivering the nutritional needs for the 21st century global population
