

ACCESSING ARCHIVES: A STUDY DAY FOR FIRST WORLD WAR COMMUNITY HERITAGE RESEARCHERS

Institute of Historical Research, Friday 21st September 2018, 10.30am - 4pm

Are you involved in a First World War community research project?
Are you interested in finding out more about the huge variety of historical records that are available to researchers?

Join us for a free event at the Institute of Historical Research bringing together archives professionals and researchers to share advice on using national, local and online collections to discover more about the First World War. Gather hints and tips on accessing archive material and learn about some of the fascinating records that have survived and can be used to deepen our understanding of wartime lives.

Speakers include: Prof. Mark Connelly (University of Kent),
Dr George Hay (The National Archives), Dr Chris Kempshall (University of Kent) and Sarah Paterson (Imperial War Museums).

The event is aimed at members of community project groups but we welcome anyone with an interest in First World War research. We have a small budget to assist with travel expenses for members of community project groups attending this event. Please contact us for further details.

This event is free and open to all.

Full programme and booking at:

https:// accessingarchives.eventbrite.co.uk

Venue:

Institute of Historical Research
University of London
Senate House, Malet Street
London, WC1E 7HU

Enquiries: gateways@kent.ac.uk

Image: Visitors to one of the Imperial War Museum's art galleries at Crystal Palace in May 1921. © IWM (Q 17028)

supported by:

